

Del. Samuel I. "Sandy" Rosenberg

In 100 words or less, what have you fought most strongly for and against in your political career?

I fought for a comprehensive bill to reduce the risk of lead poisoning. It was signed in the last year of Gov. William Donald Schaefer's time in office; it was the culmination of an extensive consensus process.

I have fought against those who would restrict a woman's right to choose.

If elected, and if you only achieve one objective in your term, what would that be?

Creating a 21st century Pimlico Race Track, with contiguous economic and community development with LifeBridge Health and others that would benefit the tracks' neighbors and the Baltimore region.

What is the single greatest challenge facing your electorate?

Finding the best school for their children.

My City delegation colleagues and I attained major construction funding under the 21st Century Schools Program. Going forward, funding the Kirwan Commission's recommendations would enable us to meet our constitutional obligation of a "thorough and efficient" public school education for all children.

Charter schools should continue to be held accountable for the student outcomes they are committed to. I also support the programs that provide for the needs of children in parochial and private schools.

Are you refusing to accept financial or volunteer support from any individuals, groups, or organizations? I am not refusing to accept checks

The votes I cast are in the best interests of my constituents, not because I have received financial or volunteer support from an individual, group, or organization.

What would you like your political legacy to be?

Repealing the death penalty is the most profound thing I will ever do. I worked effectively for every neighborhood in the district.
